

As more of our media outlets have come under the control of large organizations it becomes clear that issues affective their profit are increasingly avoided. Consolidation serves only commercial interests, which accordingly gain increasing influence over the discussion of further movement in that direction, this issue being a prime example of that effect.

We are losing the ability to have meaningful public discussion of issues.

We need less consolidation of media outlets, not more.